Matonos L'evyonim

Purim is almost here. It's time to think about Matonos L'evyonim.

As usual, the Rabbi's Discretionary Fund is anxious to receive your donations so that they can be distributed on Purim day both locally and in Eretz Yisroel.

Please consider designating some of your tzedaka for the Chemo family, our adopted family in Yerushalayim. Naturally, if these particular donations are received early enough, we have a better chance of making sure they are distributed on Purim.

Your donation can be made online, or in person to either Rabbi Goldberger or Nisan Jaffee.

Melave Malka

On February 20, Motzei Shabbos, there will be a shul-wide Melave Malka on the 2nd floor of the JCC from 8:30 to 11 pm. Join us for live music, singing and stories with Rabbi Goldberger. Dairy meal includes pizza, bagels, lox and cream cheese.

Cost is $8 per person, $20 per family. RSVP to Reb Shlomo Goldberger at 410-358-4456 or shlomhuva@aol.com.

Banquet

Our honorees for this year's banquet are Hillel and Karen Zeitlin, with the Jewish Leadership Award being presented to Chaverim and accepted by David Bagan and Binny Margolese.

Chaverim is there when you need them.

You can honor Chaverim and Hillel and Karen Zeitlin.

Midei Shabbos Beshabbato

by HaRav Eliezer Chrysler, adapted from Rabeinu Bachye

The Copper Altar

“And you shall make the Mizbei’ach of acacia-wood (atzei shitim), five Amos its length and five Amos its width, the Mizbei’ach shall be square, and three Amos its height” (27:1).

The Mizbei’ach ha’Olah (as it is commonly called, due to the fact that the bi-daily Korban Tamid was an Olah [a burnt-offering]) was placed in the Courtyard of the Mishkan, and it was overlaid with copper.

Its basic structure consisted of boards of acacia-wood on all four sides, and hollow in the middle (as the Torah specifies in Pasuk 8), which they filled in with earth whenever they encamped, during the forty years that they traveled in the Desert. When they traveled, they carried the outer structure, leaving the mound of earth in its place.

The Mizbei’ach was five Amos long and five Amos wide, the author explains, corresponding to the five commandments on the one Lu’ach, and the five, on the other; whereas its three Amos height corresponded to the three redeemers Moshe, Aharon and Miriam.

Conforming with the opinion of Rashi, R. Bachye maintains that, even though the Torah gives the Mizbei’ach’s height as three Amos, in actual fact, it was ten Amos tall (though this is actually a Machlokes Tana’im in the Gemara in Zevachim). The three Amos mentioned by the Torah, he explains, was from the Soveiv (the ledge, around which the Kohanim sometimes had to walk). And he backs up this statement with three proofs (not to mention the fact that the Pasuk in Divrei-Hayamim specifically gives the height as ten Amos [though admittedly, it is referring to the third Beis-Hamikdash, whose area is given there as twenty Amos by twenty Amos]).

Proof 1: From a Medrash, which learns, via a “Gezeirah-Shavah” “Ravu’a” “Ravu’a” from the Mizbei’ach Haketores (which was one Amah wide and two Amos tall), that the Mizbei’ach ho’Olah (which was five Amos wide), needed to be built according to the same proportions – in which case it had to be ten Amos tall!

Proof 2: From the Gemara in Succah (45a), which discusses the willow-branches that they placed at the foot of the Mizbei’ach on Succos. These were eleven Amos tall, so that they bent one Amah over the Mizbei’ach. This would make no sense if the height of the Mizbei’ach was only three Amos.

Proof 3: From the Gemara in Zevachim (59b), which learns from the Pasuk in Bamidbar (4:26), which compares the Mizbei’ach that Moshe made to the Mishkan, that, like the Mishkan, it was ten Amos tall.

The letters of “Mizbei’ach,” says R. Bachye, is equivalent to the first letters of Mechilah, Z’chus, B’rachah, Chayim; whereas that of “Shitim” is Sholom, Tovoh, Yeshu’ah, Mechilah.

Kabalistically, the Mizbei’ach represents the fourth leg of G-d’s Throne (alias the Sefirah of Malchus); Presumably, the Aron, the Menorah and the Shulchan represent the other three. And it atoned for Chutzpah (also known as “Metzach Nechushah”) which explains why it was made of copper (Nechoshes).

The Mishnah in Pirkei Avos (5:7) records two constant miracles that occurred in connection with the Mizbei’ach in the Beis-Hamikdash. Although just like its predecessor in the Mishkan, it was situated in the uncovered Courtyard, open to the elements, neither the wind nor the rain ever succeeded in extinguishing the fire (which burned on it permanently), nor in disturbing the pillar of smoke that arose in a straight line Heavenwards from the burning Korbanos.

Rabeinu Bachye discusses a third miracle that, for some reason, the Mishnah does not record. Even though, as we just mentioned, the fire burned permanently on the Mizbei’ach, it never burned through the thin layer of copper on which the Korbanos were sacrificed.

focus on ShabbosHadrash Ve-Haiyun Dor Revi’i

by Efraim Levine
(from hadrash.com)

You shall make the beams of the mishkan of shittim wood, standing erect. (Shemos 26:15)

On the day of Shabbos we are forbidden to work. To be precise, there are thirty-nine categories of forbidden labor that one may not perform. The Gemarah derives these thirty-nine categories of labor from the construction of the mishkan. Any labor that was needed for the construction of the mishkan may not be done on Shabbos.

The Gemara relates that on Shabbos we are forbidden to write because each keresh was inscribed with a letter. These letters kept track of the position and sequence of each of the forty-eight kerashim. The commentators explain that although most of the kerashim were identical and could have been easily interchanged when the mishkan was taken apart and reassembled, it was not done. This is because it was an honor for a keresh to be close to the location of the aron. If the first time the mishkan was erected a keresh was placed near the aron and upon later being reassembled was moved further away from the aron, this would slight the honor of that specific keresh. This is analogous to a person who had a distinguished front row seat at an important function and was demoted to a back row seat at the next event.

It is fascinating to note that the whole concept and purpose of writing in the mishkan was for preserving the dignity and honor of the kerashim.

Chazal tell us that the thirty-nine categories of labor that are forbidden on Shabbos are not just significant with regard to Shabbos; they represent the complete concept of constructive labor that Hashem has created in this world for us to use to serve Him.

The significance of the Torah revealing the concept of writing in the framework of honor instructs us to use the gift and talent of writing to give honor and preserve the dignity of the object we write about.

This idea is a strong rebuke to those gifted journalists and writers who thrive on writing articles that put to shame people or institutions just for the sake of gossip. To use the gift of writing to bring out the shortcomings of another does not only violate many severe Jewish laws, it abuses the power and purpose of the written word. Writing was given to honor not to shame.

It's been an entire year since I started working on the Lev Echad. I hope that you've enjoyed reading it as much as I've enjoyed playing with it.

Here's to another year.

Thank you, Suzanne

May Hashem bless her with everything good always. Thank you, Suzanne! Mechayil el Chayil.

Step Into A Pre-Copernican World

The Monday night Rambam shiur has started Hilchos Kiddush HaChodesh. These laws deal with how we establish our calendar and sync the solar and lunar cycles. The Jewish calendar is recognized as "wisdom and understanding in the eyes of the nations." It is a marvel of the Jewish people.

Rambam goes through all the calculations and considerations of our calendar, with the Earth at the center of creation, instead of being a small rock around a medium-small star at the edge of a galaxy in an inconceivably large universe of creation. A very different mindset from what we are used to.

Join us on Monday nights from 6:30 to 7:30 pm in the upstairs Beis Midrash.
